

Wheaton Village

Written by Chris Rice (Dan) photographed by Jacquelyn Koba-Rice and Bonnie Perry

Tucked back in the woods on Glasstown Rd. in Millville NJ. lies a place called Wheaton Village, a glass community striving to share the wonders of American Craft as well as offer opportunities to teach and demonstrate various mediums of art.

Wheaton Village held its 3rd annual "Marble Weekend" in June of 2004. With the help of some of the nation's best contemporary marble artists and this year's featured artist Mark Matthews, the show has grown to be one of the most incredible contemporary shows in the country. It gives the public and collectors the chance to meet and greet many artists, as well as the opportunity to see them "do their thing." There are plenty of demonstrations throughout the weekend, as well as a "Breakfast with the Artists" on Sat. morning.

With a Museum and Gallery exhibits, and many other craft mediums, Wheaton Village offers attendees a chance to see some history, as well as work by some of the finest artists in the country. If you're partial to glass or marbles in any way, be sure to sign up for Marble Weekend in 2005. It's guaranteed to make you smile

For more information on Wheaton Village and its events please visit www.wheatonvillage.org.

Photos: Top left, a Mark Mathews furnace worked marble. Top right, a borosilicate marble made by Troy Bennett of Whoopzip Clothing Co. Far Left, Willy Horn of Glass Torch Technologies. Left, Dan Grumbling with his 5 inch marble mold. Below left, Collaborative Goblet made during the Marble Weekend festivities. Below center, marbles by Geoffery Beetem. Below right, Lewis Wilson (Dirty Looie) of Crystal Myths.com.

www.wheatonvillage.org

